from the Baronage

Unto the Citizens and Populace of V'Tavia,

Baronial Champion's Tourney is this month. Those of you interested in shooting archery and fighting in the tourney better get your gear, (as well as yourselves), in shape. For a tourney with a history of rigorous fighting, this promises to be one of the most contested. If you do not know the unique nature of this list, ask. A note to newer fighters: as most of you have not had experience in the various weapon systems to feel comfortable in this list, the Baron will sponcer a second list, for those who have been fighting less than six months or less than ten fighter practices/events. This second list will be a warlord style list. If you would like to participate in the Champion's list, that is fine, too; however, we would suggest you do one or the other, not both.

That evening there will be the usual revelry, but there will also be a drinking contest for speed/style, to determine the champion to represent our Barony, at War of the Lilies. The drink must be beer, ale, stout or equivalent and if you are choosy, bring your own. You will only need two twelve-ounce cans, (a third and fourth would be a good idea in case of accidents, false starts or later partying). Your Baron will supply some form of cheap beer for those contestants who are not choosy. Remember to arrange for a sober driver when you go home, or plan on staying very late. Our car is too small to drive all of you home.

By the time you read this, it will only be six to eight weeks until War of the Lilies. For those of you who wish to be in armor by then, you better have made arrangements by now, or you will probably not have your own helmet and gauntlets in time. Better "get-to-it", if you still wish to be on the field for the War. When you get a complete set of gear togeather, (archety/fighting/scouting/water bearing), AND YOU ARE SURE that you will be going to Lilies, let your Baronage know. We would like a count of fighters/scouts/archers/et cetera. We hope to present favors to each of you, who so graciously supports the Barony.

Non-combatants/contestants might think about being water-bearers, heralds, medics, cooks, or whatever you feel your calling is. We would be henored to have you at our side, even if you are nothing more than a "campfollower". A united V'Tavia, playing together, camping together, fighting together, feasting together, singing together, and laughing together at War of the Lilies, means more, to us, than winning.

Your Baronage,

Tedrick and Aideen

from the Kerald

Greetings and such from your nice new acting Pursuivant. We all know each other, so I'll get on to the important things.

First of all—at Calon Con this past weekend I went to the herald's meeting and learned all sorts of things, among which are several items of interest to the world at large. One of these is that from now on, I need five (that's right, five) copies of the Heraldic Information Form and of the device submission form with the large drawing colored in. An extra set (coloring not necessary) would be nice for me to keep in my files. So that's a grand total of six copies of each of the two sheets I need for new submissions.

Read the MEWS for information on the status of your device.

I.d. Raonull Modar, the Saker Herald, prints such information just about every month. If at least six months have passed since your original submission and you know absolutely nothing, let me know. We can write to Saker and find these things out Here on the local level, we can be proud that we have already such a large percentage of our populace with passed names and devices. But we also have lots of new folks who need to get this process started. So-from here on out, whenever humanly possible, I will be having a consulting table at Baronial mini-events, and at other times as feasible. I will be at said table with forms, paper, marking pens, such books as the Barony has, some of my own, and others that anybody else in the Barony would like to lend for use at the table (yes, of course that's a hint). If you do lend books to the consulting table, please make sure your name is in them and that you collect them before you go home.

Designing a good device and coming up with a suitable name are not insanely difficult processes; lots of people have done it and lived. But to do so you first need to know at least something about how period people's devices looked, and how they named their children. Believe me, this is not something you learn from science fiction book covers and bust-and-cutlass novels. I'll help you all I can with your name and device, but you need to tell me you're working on them. It's amazing the number of people who ask their best friend, their mother, their ferret Fred, and—oh, yes—the herald, for help in coming up with arms. If you reverse this order of procedure, you're a lot more likely to come up with something truly medieval, and guess what? Those are the ones that pass.

My number is 522-7670 after 5:30. Call me if you need help, have questions, etc. And watch this space for further developments.

In service--Elisabeth de Rossignol (Gules, a pall erminois between three pomegranates slipped and leaved Or.)

In Service, Countess Elizabeth du Rossignol

from the Minister of Arts

Greetings !

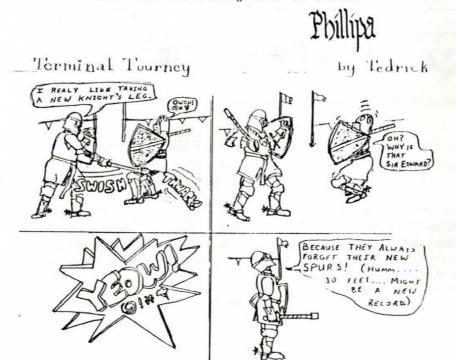

I hear there are new people among us. Hurray! An influx of new blood is something all of us need. For those of us who've been in a while, it inspires our desire to create and teach and learn, and infuses us with the enthusiasm of the new person. Please help our new folk feel comfortable and happy.

To accomplish this, I would like to have someone volunteer to begin a basic/beginner costuming class. I need someone who is willing to teach simple tabards, tunics, pants, skirts, and dresses; who can give ideas on what kind of shoes or boots are appropriate; who can guide our new people toward the right kinds of accessories to finish out their garb to give it the "right" look. If you are interested in part of this, but feel unqualified for the entire thing, please contact me anyway. We can have classes for each, with one person in charge of the entire basic garb group.

On another subject, I also would like to bear from anyone who plays any instrument, and what you play. You don't have to be great. Lord Raphael, who is a really near person, needs help. Let V'tavia not be behind in providing musicians. I have musicianyone wants copies. TELL ME! If you can't read music, we'll think of something else. I can't read it. But it doesn't stop me from singing. After all, part of the fun is learning.

For those of you interested in dance, go to RUSH in Axed Root. The classes being offered are for the serious dancer, however. But I am confident you'll learn a lot. RUSH is April 9 and 10. See your News for more details, or ask someone who has one if you don't. Or you can ask Countess Elicabeth, the chancellor of RUSH.

Let me hear from you. I can't call everybody who's doing arts: I don't know who is doing arts. So tell me.

from the Minister of Sciences

Greetings unto the populace,

I also would like input on anyone interested in classes on brewing, or calligraphy/illumination.please feel free to call me...

A RICROCOSRIC LOOK AT HEADGEAR

Ry Kasanira Verena

Forthwith, I humbly presume to expound upon "headgear" worn in various time periods. While my enthusiasm for the subject is boundless, I am sure it will not be mistaken for intimate and amassed knowledge.

Changes in fashion among the upper classes were infrequent during the greater part of the medieval period, but escalated in response to the noveities brought home from the East by the crusaders. Destern Europeans found a level of material culture considerably more advanced than their own. Rich fabrics became available for a price. The doublet was worn by men from the 14th to 17th century with headdress for men including hoods or close fitting caps tied under the chin. A tall cap with a pointed trim appeared after 1300. Through the 11th century women's hair was worn free-flowing or braided, although it was veiled for church attendance. Ey 1200, married women covered their hair with veils and wore wimples under the throat. A barbette, or crownlike headband, secured the veil.

Late fothic dress in northern Europe became more elaborate and varied than ever before. For the first time it began to reflect national differences. fothic costume shared a number of characteristics with fothic architecture. On a recent documentary about master builders and buildings showing the construction and design of several great cathedrals . it was said of these, they were to "dwarf and inspire man and remind him of his bumble station; "also "not just great height but delicacy of construction." fothic cathedrals could sometimes hold the entire population of a town. Sothic costume shared a number of characteristics with architecture. Ren's pointed shoes and women's steepled headdresses suggested the peaks and spires of Bothic castles and cathedrals. Around 1400 tiny bells were added to belts and hoods. Ren wore boods with long trailing ends, called liripipes. These boods could be drawn up and padded to create a turbanlike headgear, with scalloped edges forming a coxcomb. By 1450 tall felt hats were adopted. Bowen's headdresses were even more extravagant. Around 1350 women wore their hair coiled on either side of the face and fitted into metal baskets. By the end of the century the fashion was to draw the coiled hair up with rolled pads to create a bicorne that supported a veil. About 1420, a steeple hat or hennin, was worn with the veil would around it and left trailing. Homen's hair was hidden under these elaborate dressings.

Costume in Italy followed the international Gothic style of northern Europe until the wid-15th century. Bress then assumed a more natural appearance. The fashion for peaked Gothic headdresses declined and hair reappeared, now more elaborately trimmed with veils, ribbons and jewels.

Bowen's Bothic headdress was replaced before 1500 by a simple hood. This hood then became peaked, not unlike a playing card queen, which corresponded to the late Bothic or Tudor arch. Ren's hats were broad, and some were trimmed with gens.

The hoopskirt or farthingale, reached it's maximum width around 1600. Combined with ballooned sleeves and expanded ruffs, it made been appear unapproachable and formidable. Ben achieved a similar appearance. Except in Spain, it was gone by 1620. The Cavalier look resulted from the English Civil Bar and on the Continent, the 30 years war. Bith its broad-topped boots, slashed doubtets and wide brimmed hats, it dominated men's attire until 1600. A new elegance followed that reflected the magnificence of Louis XID's court at Versailles and in England and the restoration of the monarchy after 10 years of Puritan rule. Ben took to wearing cascading shoulder-length wigs. Both men and women were the Puritan hat until 1660 when women's bonnets appeared. Bowen were their hair naturally and covered it with a kerchief. By 1680, women's beight was accentuated by the fontage, a headdress of ribbon and lace that mounted to a height of a foot or more.

Dress and manners became comparatively relaxed in Europe during the 18th century. The immense wigs worn by men in the years immediately preceding 1720 gave way to natural-sized powdered wigs. The hat for men throughout the century was the tri-corn, a low-crowned hat with the rin turned up on three sides.

It is extremely gratifying, and a decided visual treat, to feast my eyes upon all the garb and headgear I have encountered. What a happy circumstance!

> In service to D'Tavia, Rasamera (Sharon Laurence)
